

Ole Miss Rebels

Madison Scott and Myah Taylor

Madison Scott

What did you learn in close games against bigger opponents?

"Just never quit. We are in the SEC, we are in the best conference in the world. Every single night is a game and every single night you could win or lose. Our job is just to show up, execute the game plan very well, play together, stay together and just trust it. So, every night we are going to come out and try our best to get the win and just know in those close games we have to find a way to pull it out. I think being in close games last year did give us that experience though. As humans, as women basketball players, we learn and grow every day. So we are going to use those moments from last year, watch film, as we have already done, and watch it again, and just want to get better. So hopefully, when those situations happen again, we are ready for them and we can attack them and come out with a dub."

What has your team worked on during the offseason that you are excited for fans to see?

"Probably our defense. Ole Miss, their program, is known for their defense and their intensity and that is something we work on every single day in practice. So, we make sure that in the game we show that same intensity and that same force."
